

In Pictures: Ultra-Lavish Corporate Picnics

Read the full story Lauren Sherman

E-mail ! Create Alerts [Navigation icons] Speed - [Slider] +

THQ

To launch its latest videogame, "Stuntman," in June, interactive entertainment software group THQ hired Toluca Lake, Calif.-based Eventmakers to create a movie set where employees could feel what it's like to drive in a car with an actual stuntman. Stunt driver Crazy Suede took employees for a ride on the seventh level of a film studio parking lot, allowing them to recreate a scene right out of TheFast and The Furious. The highlight of the catered lunch was the desserts, which included cheesecake lollipops and miniature frozen Ding Dongs on sticks.

More Slide Shows

The World's Top-Earning Models

America's 25 Best-Paying Jobs

ADVERTISEMENT

Available at Forbes
 .com

REAL-TIME
 Streaming Portfolios

Streaming
 Quotestream
 Desktop

Web Portfolio
 in Real-time

Featured Slide Shows

The Worlds Top-Earning Models

Ultra-Expensive Rock Concert Tees

Cybercriminals Map Of The World

Inside A Victorias Secret Shoot With Alessandra Ambrosio

The 10 Most Anticipated New Video Games

Today on Forbes.com - Punishing Google - Long Live Sumner Redstone! - Immigration Shootout At The Local Corral - 'Lights' Out At Emmys - Mao Meets The Middle Class

ADVERTISEMENTS

Quicken Loans® Home Loans Auto Insurance Quotes Mortgage Rates at 3.0%